

first ball. He lobs the ball easily for a day or so until the muscles in his arm and wrist find themselves.

Cy Young doesn't attempt a fast ball until he is just right and no one but himself can tell when this will be. He says he doesn't know how he knows when the moment arrives, but he just naturally begins to speed them across and perhaps to put "something on the ball" at the correct time.

The result is you never hear of Cy Young complaining of a sore arm, or wrenched back, as many youngsters do.

When Young started this year he didn't have a suspicion of a waist line. It was more like a round house. Now he certainly does look good. He is carrying very little surplus in his mid section and the work he is doing ought to remove this in another week. He is not so stout as he was when John L. Taylor sold him to Cleveland and he has been making the men who predicted he was all in, take notice by the way he has rounded into form.

Although he is a strong advocate in temperance, Cy indulges to the extent of one glass of liquor every day before his work-out. He believes his system demands it. He has followed the practice for years.

They declared that wages should be high enough to preclude the necessity of the woman having to leave her home and work for wages. If the women did not work, they said, wages would be increased. There would be more demand for labor, and it could set a higher price on its product.

Mrs. Anna Willard Timmeus was the first woman to rap the resolution. She said that if some husbands of families she knew were the sole support of the households, the children would be forced to go without shoes. The men were willing to work, but
